Mead, Monroe, and Perry are very close countles as between the Democracy and the opposition; and the candidates should be Americans, for in these, as in other counties mentioned above, the greater part of the opposition strength is American. If there were a harmonious union in Illinois between the Americans and the Republicans would certainly claim the right of running candidates, heretween identified with their party, in strong Republican counties, or in counties where the Republicans have a majority of the opposition to the results and strive to obtain the balance of power with a view to wielding it effectually to advance the interests of their party and the country.
